Findings in the Allrecipes 2013 Holiday Trends Report proved that the role of digital resources is increasingly significant when it comes to planning, shopping, and preparing for holiday meals. This is especially true for Millennial home cooks, 39 percent of whom plan to host Thanksgiving gatherings this year at their homes.

In addition, Millennials are the most likely generation of home cooks to complement traditional cookbooks and media with digital resources such as recipe websites and apps (44%), social media (25%), online videos (25%), and blogs (20%) for inspiration and guidance. They are also the most likely generation to be shopping, cooking, and sharing using smartphones and tablets, which is why Allrecipes and Campbell's are combining the expertise of America's largest cooking community with the latest digital technologies to provide real-time resources, including mobile text, social media and online videos, to meet home cooks' most urgent Thanksgiving questions.

For example, if a home cook finds the gravy too lumpy or discovers the turkey just won't cook through, they can simply text the word "holiday" to 63485 on their mobile phones for immediate help and links to resources to prevent or resolve nearly any Thanksgiving crisis.

"At Allrecipes, our focus is to help our community of home cooks shine this holiday season," said Stan Pavlovsky, Allrecipes' President. "We're excited to share our extensive suite of resources, tools, and comprehensive collection of top-rated recipes with this tech-savvy generation and others to create a stress-free Thanksgiving."

"We're thrilled to be partnering with Allrecipes again this year in its mission to provide a superior level of inspiration and support for all home cooks," said Mark Tumelty, Brand Manager, at Campbell's. "The Campbell's brand is synonymous with Thanksgiving celebrations and we can't think of a better platform to reach the Holiday Hostess during the year's busiest cooking season."

In 2012, a record-breaking number of home cooks visited Allrecipes sites and apps during the weeks leading up to Thanksgiving Day. This year, whether seeking inspiration about how to feed a crowd of hungry friends, serve tried-and-true recipes at an intimate family gathering, or prepare a homemade food gift to share; Allrecipes has recipes, videos, and meal ideas available across devices for every dish on the Thanksgiving table.
