

Meredith Announces Microsoft Tag as 2D Barcode Standard for Magazine Portfolio

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, 2011 /PRNewswire/ -- Meredith Corporation (NYSE:MDP, www.meredith.com), the leading media and marketing company serving American women, announced plans today to make Microsoft Tag the 2D barcode standard across its portfolio of magazines, which reach nearly 80 million readers every month. The initiative, effective in early 2012, aims to provide readers with an easy to use and quality experience month after month, and increase engagement with value-added content behind the mobile barcodes.

Mobile barcodes, like Microsoft Tag, link physical objects to digital content by scanning a printed code with a mobile device. Meredith has already leveraged Microsoft's Tag technology across their network in publications including Better Homes and Gardens, Family Circle, Ladies' Home Journal, Traditional Home and Recipe.com to allow readers to watch how-to recipe videos, link to holiday decorations and gift ideas, connect with leading designers and decorators, and create special events and experiences for their families.

"We are excited to launch this initiative to standardize the 2D barcode experience for our readers," said Liz Schimel, EVP/Chief Digital Officer, Meredith. "We chose the Microsoft Tag platform, as it offers the innovation, scale and product features to create a dynamic and consistent experience for our readers across our published content."

"Microsoft Tag technology enables partners to offer rich, interactive mobile experiences and Meredith Corporation is a great example of a partner that has already employed hundreds of creative campaigns to make the most out of Tag," says Aaron Getz, Tag product unit manager at Microsoft Corp. "We're thrilled to extend our relationship with Meredith to drive a consistent 2D barcode experience across all of their publications and bring the magazine pages to life with added value at every turn."
